FOREIGN TRADE IS TOPIC OF ADDRESS AT CHAMBER MEET

Niles Named as Largest "Little" Export Center in Bay Region

Foreign trade, as a national necessity, was a topic discussed before the Niles Chamber of Commerce Monday by John A. Sowers, foreign trade expert and professor of a Berkeley business college.

Beginning his address with the declaration that there is need for a keener appreciation of what foreign trade is, Sowers told of the change in the international scene, brought about by an ever-increasing speed in world communication and transportation, with a subsequent interdependence of nations upon each other. He likened foreign trade to business relations between counties and states, and said that no country can plan nationally without affecting international trade channels, and other countries.

Pointing out the vast quantities of goods imported and exported annually, Sowers explained why no nation, under the present scale of living, can isolate itself economically. He deplored the efforts of powerful "jingo" journals to bring about a stoppage of relations between the United States and foreign lands, and told of one huge newspaper organization, carrying on a rabid "buy American" campaign printed on foreign newsprint.

Supplementing Sowers' address, J. Scott, of the California Nursery Company's foreign trade department, brought the meaning of international commerce home to the local civic group with a list of far-flung points to which his company makes shipments. He stated that Niles is perhaps the most important export center of its size in this section of the state.

Previous to the addresses, E. Dixon Bristow, president of the Mens Club, called attention of the civic organization to the club dinner and meeting, held last night at Centerville. Bristow asked that prospective members for the club be asked to attend. He told of a meeting to be held at the Memorial building, in Niles, on May 22, at which speakers will discuss the dangers of communism in the United States. He urged all to attend.

In a report from the committee appointed to investigate possibility of new bridge construction in Niles canyon, it was revealed that J. H. Skeggs, state highway official, has sent word that no work will be possible for the present time at least.

ROBERT LIVERMORE HONORED SUNDAY AT CENTENNIAL

Marker Is Dedicated At Mission San Jose By Native Daughters

A celebration of the centennial of the settling of Robert Livermore, rancher, sailor, Indian-fighter and pioneer, in the valley which now bears his name, was held Sunday at Mission San Jose, where a marker to his memory was dedicated in the Mission churchyard. Later in the day a monument, marking the site of the original Livermore home, near Livermore, was also dedicated.

The marker in the Mission San Jose graveyard, beside the old church in which Livermore's body lies, was dedicated by the Angelita Parlor No. 32, Native Daughters of the Golden West, of Livermore.

Following opening remarks by Mrs. R. R. Kingsley, president of the parlor, the dedicatory address was delivered by Mrs. Gladys Noce, grand president of the Native Daughters. The bronze plaque on the stone bore the following inscription:

"In memory of Robert E. Livermore, the first Anglo-Saxon settler of Livermore valley Born in England 1899, died in Born in England 1799, died in erected by Angelita Parlor, No. 32, of the Native Daughters of the Golden West, Livermore, Calif., May 12, 1935."

In addition to the centennial of Livermore's coming to the valley, the forty-seventh anniversary of the Angelita parlor was celebrated. Benediction was by Mrs. Anne McDonald, only living charter member of Angelita parlor. A song, "I Love You, California," followed Mrs. Noce's address.

Among direct descendants of Robert Livermore, who were present at the dedication of the marker at Mission San Jose and at the unveiling of the monument near Livermore in the afternoon were:

Miss Evelyn Schenone, R. H. Mahoney, Anne E. Mahoney, Robert Livermore Mahoney, Mrs. Victoria De Martin, Mrs. F. Y. Chapman, Mrs. S. A. Dana, Mrs. Katherine Schenone, Mrs. Pearl Curran and Louis, Clifford, Charles and Nicholas Livermore.

Members of the Laura Loma parlor of Niles and the Betsy Ross parlor of Centerville, Native daughters, and representatives of the Washington parlor, Native Sons, attended the ceremonies.

Mrs. George Emerson, with another party of club members, will attend the conclave on Friday.

ALAMEDA COUNTY PROBE BY LEGISLATURE LOOMS, MEASURE IN ASSEMBLY

Investigation of Charity Department Urged; Graft Charged

The Alameda county taxpayer, lulled into submissive acceptance of a tax burden out of which father-son and man-wife teams derive their handsome double salaries, was given a glimmer of hope last week with the introduction of a measure into the state legislature to have an investigation of the Alameda county welfare department and county officials handling SERA funds. Supervisor Richmond's boy is supervisor of charity, a berth recently created by the board of supervisors. Assemblyman Charles Wagner, proponent of the measure, brought it before the lower house last week, and is preparing to push it in an early approval.

Assemblyman Gardiner Johnson, Berkeley, is expected to lead the opposition to the Wagner measure, on grounds that such an investigation should be in the hands of the county authorities, and should not concern the state assembly. Taxpayers, however, seem to be of the opinion that the investigation should not be a "family" affair with a lot of whitewash splattered over the landscape, and favor a thorough state probe.

Wagner claims both the county SERA and the welfare administration have failed to function in the interest of destitute unemployed American citizens on relief.

Incompetency and waste of public funds was charged by the Oakland assemblyman, according to a Sacramento dispatch. Because there are state, county and SERA setups for relief in Alameda county, Wagner said

For Heaven's Sake, Turn 'Em Loose

Merriam certainly is making the old guard gasp. And we believe the governor of ripe and industrious years is enjoying the manner in which he is shocking his erstwhile friends. When the big boys support a candidate for governor, and elect him, they figure they own him. That has been the unwritten law of politics so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary.

Scrapping this theory of very practical political ethics, the present governor goes merrily along his own course, letting the world understand that HE is governor, not a catspaw for "vested interests."

The latest attack of heart failure suffered by the elite of California, is the rumor—well founded—that Merriam will pardon both Mooney and Billings. It is said he inspired the resolution passed by both houses of the legislature memorializing the governor to turn these celebrated prisoners loose.

To the proposition, the Register but reiterates an opinion oft expressed; that Mooney, especially, will be less dangerous out of the penitentiary than in. On the question of his innocence or guilt this paper has never expressed a conviction.

RESENTS SCHOOL FUNDS RAID

By EPH. L. MUSICK

Although the writer of this article holds one of the grammar school principalships in the township, a position that is strictly administrative in its sphere, he is a citizen possessed with an inalienable right to comment on public questions. Therefore, he hereby heartily commends the editor of the Township Register for the stand he took in his last issue in opposition to the proposal to more than double the financial aid that the school districts in this township give now to the health center. In doing so, all statements made by him are absolutely personal, and in no way do they knowingly reflect the opinions of the school trustees and the patrons of the Newark school district.

BURTWELL HEARING AT NILES COURT TOMORROW

Denying his guilt, George Burtwell, 23, itinerant negro charged with robbing Mrs. Elsie Soares, Centerville woman, recently, was arraigned before Judge J. A. Silva, at the Niles court house Monday afternoon. Burtwell was represented by Public defender H. C. Forsman. Preliminary hearing will be tomorrow afternoon at the local court.

Burtwell, arrested in the hills near Mission San Jose after the robbery, is alleged to have entered the Soares home and seized Mrs. Soares in an effort to keep her from seeing him. He is said to have demanded money, and to have taken a small sum hidden in a box. Mrs. Soares filed a complaint on May 3, and Burtwell was charged with a felony. Unable to raise bail, he is being held in the county jail.

DEPOT ROBBER GIVES SELF UP TO LOCAL AUTHORITIES

Declaring that he was one of two burglars who smashed the safe in the Southern Pacific depot, at Niles, on the night of December 17, 1933, a negro youth is reported to have given himself up to local authorities last week. The boy, in custody of Deputy Sheriff James Ritchie, was taken to the scene of the crime where he is said to have given a detailed account of how he and an accomplice, battered the safe open with crowbars, and escaped with about $16.

Stating that he was sixteen years of age at the time of the robbery, the boy is being held, pending a thorough examination of his record by authorities, and reliable data on the time and place of his birth. If his stated age is correct, the boy will be arraigned before the juvenile court, rather than in the superior court.

Farrington Dairy—pure Jersey milk and cream.—86cts

As was stated exclusively last week in the Township Register, the various school districts in this township have been requested to increase their financial aid to the health center to the amount of $1.00 per child based on average daily attendance. At the present time the Newark school district pays to the health center $7.50 a month. That amount is not great, yet it is commensurate with the services rendered in return when one considers the fact that the county assistance given to the health center comes in part from the district. Under the proposed plan, the Newark school district would allot about $200 per year to the health center, more than twice what is paid now.

But why this demand for the more than doubling of financial aid at this time? Has the county exhausted its pay sack? The township enrollment in the schools is near what it was last year. It is true that several districts have suffered from epidemics this year, but it will do no good to increase a patient's dose from one pill to two pills if the one pill was not the right pill. Would it not be wise to forget the money phase and look elsewhere for the cause of epidemics? The moving picture and the automobile have brought about a promiscuous association of people never known before. They have brought about their consequent spread of child diseases. That change in our social life can be and it should be remedied, but why charge the bill up to the public school fund?

There was a time when I was reasonably conversant with our plan of government as applied to the nation, the state, and the county; but today the three divisions are so mixed up in a hotchpotch of bureaucracy that it would take a Philadelphia lawyer to tell whether we are coming or going. However, with the federal and state governments running so heavily into the red, my gumption tells me that this is not the time to increase government expenses in the local divisions. Last week the state school funds were reported ten millions behind the state budget. With that knowledge before us, it would be criminal to cripple further the

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Seeking death by throwing herself from the summit of Lone Mesa, to escape dishonor at the hands of a drunken desperado, Sonya Savarin allows herself to be rescued by her suddenly sobered and repentant attacker. The girl is a self-appointed physician to the Navajo Indians, living on an Arizona sheep ranch with her brother, Serge, his wife, Lila, and their small daughter, Baba. For a year she has been engaged to Rodney Blake, wealthy New Yorker, but her heart is with the friendly Navajos and she evades a wedding.

CHAPTER II.—Sonya pulls Little Moon, wife of Two Fingers, a Navajo, through the crisis of an illness. Two Fingers is deeply grateful.

Beelzebub was abroad in the land—Beelzebub and his henchman. He had seen them with his own eyes, he the Servant of the Lord in humble places. They traveled together by night, and danger waited on them, death and danger and disaster. It had struck just across the Border in that stark form hung upon a cross. It was no common thief who rotted there in the windy sun, but one who had betrayed his master. Beelzebub himself, that master, dark and cold and wicked as infernal fire. He was a power and a force not to be reckoned with or questioned. Though several hundred miles lay between the Border and this sheltered spot, still the finger of the Wicked One could reach even here. The old man had seen shadows. Many shadows. Chief of them the Master's blue-eyed henchman. No good stayed where the Blue-eyed One went by. He had heard of him across the line last year, the tall one with bronze-colored hair who was always seen when disaster was to follow. A sign and a symbol of disaster, this tall one with the wild eyes. And he had seen him three days back riding down the trail to Red Rock canyon on a horse of solid gold. So did the Wicked One mount his followers.

Well, it was growing late, and he was tired. The old were always tired. So he would find his blankets and sleep, if his friends permitted.

He rose and bowed with a lean grace, vague remnant of some forgotten time, and went away toward the camp he had made with his packs and his weary burros, and Sonya Savarin sat still in every atom of her body with a strange stillness. It seemed as if a hushing hand had been laid upon her spirit, something cold and sinister came down upon her like a cloud. Evil seemed to fall with the night and the old man's words, and presently she shivered and wrapped her arms across each other as if to shut it out. Then she shook herself and listened to Myra, who was saying how mad the Servant was. A strange old creature. Gentle and kind and quite, quite mad, so Myra thought.

But Sonya thought he was somehow akin to her in this quixotic crusade against suffering. Only he had added sin as well.

And he seemed to have a vision. It was this prophetic vision, fitting so closely with her own sense of disaster concerning certain things, which seemed to fall upon her with so chill a touch.

Piffle! She was getting old herself! It was the night and the silence of the vast country under its great stars. What were rumors of a Border bandit to her? A dark renegade who crucified his double-crossers! Nothing. She would forget the chill it gave her. She'd be all right by day.

And so she was, visiting with Myra, laughing and happy, watching the Servant ride away, his saddlebags bulging with Myra Little's generous gifts of food.

She stayed two days at the Black Sheep and left early on the third, much to Myra's dissatisfaction, who held her hand as she leaped from Darkness' saddle and talked till the last minute.

CHAPTER IV

The Spots of the Leopard.

AT THE home ranch Sonya found two air-mail letters from Rodney Blake which completed her entire return to the commonplace. She smiled as she read them, and for the first time it seemed as if there might be a charm or two in the great city he depicted so colorfully.

She rode over to Chee wash to see Two Fingers and Little Moon the next day and found the Indian woman up, and about the simple matters of her hogan, her rug, and her family.

It gave the girl a thrill to see her so, the flush of joy that such vindication of her work always brought. She was poor as the goods of this world went, they were all fairly so, Serge and Lila and little Baba, but she felt very rich inside her, arrogantly rich, and she could smile up at the blue heavens with a secret sense of fellowship.

So she left her last instructions with the little family at the hogan, patted the cheek of the youngest round-eyed child, and rode away erect in her saddle and pretty well satisfied with herself and the world at large.

It was in this mood that she came under the tall face of Lone Mesa.

As she swung round its southeastern side, she decided to go up. The trail, cut into the sheer face of those long dead inhabitants of the pueblo, went up from here, angling sharply, and so steep that none but the level headed dared to make it. She was such, and so was the good horse under her, though they had both sweated in a cool day the first time they had attempted it.

It was a stiff and slow climb, but presently they gained the top and scrambled up through the small defile that was the steep trail's end.

As they went forward Sonya felt the surge and thrill she always felt at sight of the vast reach of the world about her, spread out so far below. Taking off her hat, she sat long in contemplation, her hands and the hat resting on her pommel.

For a long time she sat so, then reined away toward the right. She would circle the mesa, look at the silent white houses with their flat roofs, still amazingly intact, look at the great stone basin which was nearly always sweet with water caught in the yearly rains.

Presently she left the ancient tank and went on toward the north, circling the huddled houses, and was turning eastward around them when she stopped dead still.

A horse stood there in the blue shadow of the silent walls and a man sat on his haunches smoking a cigarette. The horse was golden as a raw pigot, and the man was bronzed and lean. The light of his bare head shone in the cool shade. He looked up, and Sonya looked down, and the girl's eyes dilated with swift excitement.

"So!" she said coldly, her lips suddenly tight. "You come here again?"

The man arose, a single motion beautifully correlated. Sonya, not conscious of what she was doing, sat looking at him, and presently he looked up at her, a straight look, humble and still.

"I—like the mesa," he said. "It's so high and austere, so far from— from everything."

At the contact of his glance the strange tense feeling which this man's presence had caused at every meeting took hold on Sonya. It was not fear—it had never been—nor repugnance, nor the anger which had stirred her, but a little of all shot through with something which she could not define, a sense of prophecy, a forecast of destiny.

It chilled her within and sent a wave of fire across the chill, and for a wild moment she felt as if the solid rock were falling away beneath her. Then she caught herself together severely and lifted Darkness' rein, and the man spoke again.

"Please," he said, "please, Miss Savarin, don't go away. I'll go right gladly."

He reached for the bridle of the golden horse and drew it to him, hesitating.

"I know I've got no right even to speak to you," he said, "or look at you after—that day up here, but if I was to be hung for it next second I couldn't help it. And I don't want to cause you another minute's trouble or unhappiness. If this here mesa's a favorite place of yours, I'll never come again. Don't stay away yourself. It's too sweet to be lost."

"But you'd lose it," Sonya said against her will.

"I'd lose my right hand if I would help," he said doggedly, looking down and fiddling with his latigo.

"H'm," said the girl through her nostrils, a sharp and cynical sound.

"I would," he repeated, "an' all you've got to do is set a mark to prove it. Is there anything—any single thing that a man can do to prove his word? Tell me, and I'll do it."

"Who is the bandit across the Border who crucifies his double-crossers?" cried Sonya like a shot and gasped at the sound of her own words. It seemed as if another person spoke them, so wholly unintentional had they been.

The man's eyes flashed up to hers, and once again they were wild as any hawk's, the black of the pupils spreading over the blue of the irises. Slowly the color drained from his face, leaving it ash white beneath its bronze, the lips pale as blue milk.

"Good G—d!" he said and was silent.

The girl was silent, too, and for the first time she felt a flash of fear, as if she had set in motion sinister forces of which she knew nothing. They stared at each other for a moment agast at this thing which had sprung between them, stark and terrible, and then Sonya flicked her rein, moved in her saddle recovering. She knew she had touched disaster too deep for a woman's hand, and she drew back instinctively.

"No," she said swiftly, "don't answer. I shouldn't have asked. And it's no proof, anyway. I don't want proof. What's past is past. I take your word."

The man wet his stiff lips. "You do? Do you believe what I've been trying to tell you ever since that day? That I could kill myself for what I did? Do you believe me?"

"Yes," said Sonya. "Not that it matters, but I do."

He took out a white handkerchief and wiped his face, which was sweating in the high cool wind.

"No," he said unsteadily, "not that it matters—to you. But it does to me. Why, I don't know, but it does. More than anything has ever mattered in my whole d—d life—I beg your pardon!"

"Granted," said the girl. "Serge swears."

"Serge?"

"My brother."

"Well, it matters, and I've spent hours alone up here and other places wondering about it and why it does. I've known women all my life, in several countries, and never a one that stayed in my mind a week after I left her. I'm a bad lot, as I told you before, and it doesn't mean a great deal what I think, one way or another, only I ain't ever felt so sorry in all my days over anything. I was just wondering, when you rode around th' wall yonder."

Sonya regarded him steadily. "It does matter," she said, "what anyone thinks and does. No man lives to himself alone, as the Good Book says. To every man his place and a certain amount of influence. And to every man his responsibility, too, for that influence. You've got influence, somewhere for something."

"And something's changing in you," the girl went on, "there's been a change in you since—the first time I saw you. In your face, in your speech. You're using more 'g's on the end of your words, for one thing, and your eyes are different."

"If they weren't when I look at you, I'd be lower than I am, and that's plenty low."

"Granted again," said Sonya calmly and watched the slow tide of red that swept up over his pale cheeks. "But the very fact of change outwardly argues change inwardly. I'd trust you now a considerable way."

He drew a long breath of fragrant smoke and, turning away, looked out over the spread of desert shimmering under the early afternoon sun.

When he turned back to her Sonya was shocked at the look on his handsome face, a sunken look, haggard, as if some cruel vise of the spirit had suddenly been set upon it. He smiled, for the first time in her experience of him, and something leaped in Sonya's heart like a captive bird struggling to be free.

"Miss Savarin," he said, "that's the sweetest and the cruellest thing you ever said in your life. It's a dangerous thing, too—for me. Yet I'm glad you said it. It'll be something—something to remember among worse memories. And now I'll be getting along. Please come here whenever you want to. Lone Mesa is yours from now on."

He swung into his saddle, and the girl put out a quick hand and caught his sleeve.

"No," she said swiftly, "why should you give it up? There's something here for you, something good, I know. It's your eyes when you look out yonder, a peace and a healing, and I want you to have that. You need it. It—it's something of—the of the soul, if you see what I mean."

Gravely he looked at her, shook his head wonderingly.

"My G—d!" he said softly. "What a woman you are! I didn't know there was one like you outside of th' story books! Are you, by any chance, a lady preacher?"

"No," said Sonya, "of course not. I'm a physician. But I'm a woman first, and I can see when a heart's sick as well as a body. You're sick in your soul, your character, or I miss my guess—and I usually don't do that."

"No," he said, "you haven't now. But it don't matter in this case. It's too late for medicine—even yours."

"It's not," said Sonya, and was astonished at the passion of her tone; "it's never too late. Not till one's last heartbeat—only then."

"What are you tryin' to do?" he asked her gently, smiling into her eyes again—"change th' spots of th' leopard? Be careful. There's no more treacherous beast alive. An' I'm telling you true, Miss Savarin. I'm a leopard at heart, cruel and fierce, and not fit for you to speak to like this, straight out, man to man. I don't deserve it. If you knew what an' who I am you'd turn your horse an' ride for that down trail like all possessed, and you'd be right."

"Maybe I do know—a little," Sonya flashed, "but I'm not afraid. I'm never afraid of anything."

"No. You're like a white angel in armor," he said gravely; "you haven't any need to fear. Even I could not hurt you when I wanted to. You're safe—anywhere—any time. Th' devil himself couldn't hurt you." "Will you remember what I say—that it's never too late to change?" "I'll remember," he said politely, "an' thanks. Now, good-by, and good luck always, Miss Savarin."

"Good-by," said Sonya, "and the same to you." He carried his hat in his hand, as he whirled the horse around the corner of the ancient stone house, and did not look back, and Sonya listened to the shod hoofs striking into the defile that led down the face of the sheer cliff.

She sat stiffly quiet in her saddle and was conscious of a strange tumult within her spirit. What had she done, talking here in this high solitude with this mysterious rider whose inner self was black with unnamed sins—whose very presence in the land was a menace and a portent of disaster? For she knew past all doubting that this was the Blue-eyed One of whom the Servant spoke in his vague parables, that henchman of Beelzebub who went before trouble. And she who owed him hatred, who had vowed to take her pound of flesh from him because of what he had tried to do that day at the mesa's rim! She had talked with him, earnestly, and without scorn!

The next day she went to see Little Moon and refused the bundle of sheep pelts which Two Fingers offered her, along with the gorgeous finished blanket which the woman laid across her knees.

Sonya stroked the latter with appreciative fingers, but shook her head, smiling.

"What I did for you," she told them in Navajo, "was a giving—a service to my people. You are my people. I have chosen the Navajos before the Great Spirit. Let be. It is well."

After a long silence Two Fingers said, "It is well. And we and all the Navajos around here are your little people, under your feet. A soft blanket to keep your heels from the stones."

"It is very well," the girl said gravely, and knew he spoke the truth. There was to come a day when she would have ample and tragic proof of that, but it was just as well she could not see ahead.

From Chee wash she rode down along the levels of the sage to where the debouching canyon had given up its pitiful small caravan that day she had seen Mr. Satter from the school taking away the children.

On an impulse she turned and rode into this rugged cut that bisected the rising land. She rounded a far-in turn and came upon a habitation. For a time she sat on her horse and contemplated it—a good hogan set against the canyon's wall. There was little sign of prosperity. No rug bloomed on its hand made loom, the hogan was bare of comforts, the beds on its floor being this and scant. Evidently these Indians were very poor.

She did not call or move about, but sat still in her saddle, waiting, and presently her patience was rewarded, for a soft step sounded behind her and she turned to see the wild buck, the squaw, and the littlest child of that pitiful drama in which she had participated.

She smiled at them, and when Sonya Savarin smiled, a window of her soul opened and disclosed a light. The family came carefully up to her.

"I come to see if all is well with you and yours," she told the man in Navajo.

"It is well with this one," he replied, touching the child, "but not with this one," touching the mother. "Her heart runs away in water, and she does not eat."

And looking closer Sonya saw in astonished sorrow that it was so indeed. The woman who had been plump and hale some weeks back, was now a scarecrow, her old velvet jacket hanging loose on her form, her tragic eyes sunk in hollows. Her brown lips looked dry and hard.

For a moment the girl felt such a revulsion against the whole white race as to give her an actual nausea. Her hands ached to get hold of Satter's fat neck for one good minute.

"So," she said, "I see. Have you told her that the little ones will be coming home soon? Did the agent tell you when to go after them?"

"No," said the man, "and I do not know where to go."

"Oh," said Sonya under her breath. "The dirty beast!" Aloud she said slowly, "Well, you tell her to look up to the east and before many days she will see her children coming. What is your name, Hosteen?"

The man hesitated, since the naming of one's own name is not good, but this was a desperate matter. "I am Hosteen Nez," he said presently, "and she is Cactus Flower."

"And I am Sonya—Doctor Sonya—from down on the desert beyond Lone Mesa, and I will see the man who took the children. Maybe four sleeps, maybe five. You tell her eat and get strong."

"I will tell her," said Hosteen Nez, and his eyes looked so deep into Sonya's that the girl's heart hurt with their probing.

"I will come again," she said and, turning Darkness, went back down the great cut of Blue Sand canyon as she had come.

HUGE QUANTITIES OF MATERIAL IN JUNIOR HILL SIGN

No longer "Nil," after intensive work by volunteers Sunday, the Niles Junior Chamber of Commerce hill sign has taken into itself an "E," with the "S" to be well along toward completion at the end of this week. The latter letter, by far the thickest and most complicated of the five, will require large quantities of material, according to Guido Tuana, chairman of the project.

In illustrating the magnitude of the task, Tuana gave out the following figures on materials used: About 330 board feet of lumber for the forms; 50 cubic yards of sand and gravel; 90 tons of rock and about 60 sacks of cement. All of the above material, plus the water, had to be hauled up to the site via the "cable-way," slung by the junior group workmen.

Tuana uses a vivid comparison to make clear the huge size of the task. He states that a sidewalk, five feet wide and six inches thick, could be laid for

Is the New Deal the way out?

(Editor's Note—The following editorial comment is written for the Township Register by K. M. Gitt, Los Angeles newspaperman, now retired. Twenty years ago Gitt, and Norman H. Parks worked together and became intimate friends. It is probable that Mr. Gitt will, from time to time, contribute articles for Register readers.)

By K. M. GITT

This is the problem that is agitating the minds of thoughtful people everywhere.

Recently a debate was announced on the subject by two noted speakers, one affirming and the other denying; but after the immense audience had assembled in one of the largest auditoriums in Los Angeles it was found the two speakers virtually agreed that the new deal was not the solution.

A calm and dispassionate appraisal of our condition by a foreign statesman, Winston Churchill, recently published, indicated he had serious misgivings as to the outcome. He said, among other things, that there appeared now and then flashes of sunshine off the horizon, covering our program, but they were those of the afternoon.

A great many years ago, before we had the mass production we have today, the writer has heard it repeated many times by those who knew, that we had already solved the problem of production—abundance; we had everything. But the problem of distribution was even then, as it had been for centuries and is today, the one greatest problem.

The great economist, Roger Babson, said that; never in the history of the world had a nation so deliberately unbalanced its budget as this nation is now doing and continued to do without encountering in the end a revolution.

Relief money is being expended by the barrel, but the relief administrators are getting a disproportionate amount of the whole. It is not generally known, just to mention one little item in the regular government administration, that a force of about 250, most of them attorneys and supposed experts on financial matters, are employed at large salaries to make up a budget each year to determine how much tax is required; but as the taxes collected come nowhere near the cost of government, there is little they can do, and the need for their services is problematical. It is estimated we are running deeper into the red at the rate of $5,600 a minute, according to recent figures.

NEWSPAPER OWNERSHIP HAZY

By K. M. GITT

The newspaper lineup in Los Angeles is getting to be rather mixed. Recently the old Los Angeles Record (now called the Post-Record) changed hands again. Mr. Boddy, of the Morning Illustrated News, is named as publisher, but who the legal owners are is not stated. Many rumors are current. One is to the effect that what is wanted is a staunch, orthodox Democratic newspaper in Los Angeles—one that can be depended upon to support the party in every way. At any rate, the Post-Record seems to have plenty of funds and is using money unsparingly to the delight of the printers and other departments.

AUXILIARY UNIT 195 PREPARING FOR POPPY DAY

Saturday, May 25, will be Poppy Day in Washington township. On that day the women of the Washington township unit of the American Legion Auxiliary will distribute red poppies on the streets, to be worn in honor of the World War dead. The observance here will be part of the annual nation-wide observance of Poppy Day, during which millions of Americans will pay tribute by wearing memorial poppies.

The day's activities in this district will be directed by a committee from the auxiliary unit, headed by Mrs. Geneva Smith, chairman. A large corps of volunteer workers will be organized to carry out the distribution of the flowers, which have been ordered from the United States Veterans' hospital, at Livermore. The flowers are made by disabled veterans.

In exchange for the poppies, members of the local unit will ask for contributions for the support of disabled veterans and their families. The bulk of the sum derived from this source will be dispensed by the local unit and post, according to Mrs. Theresa Swartz, auxiliary president.

JOSEPH S. ANDRADE, MISSION RANCHER, SUMMONED

Joseph S. Andrade, 67, a pioneer resident of Mission San Jose, died at his home on Ellsworth street, in that city, last Wednesday, after a prolonged illness. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Hortense Andrade, and the following children: Mrs. Mary Dutra, Mrs. Antoinette Silveira, Mrs. Hortense Cunha and Adeline, Anthony and Elmo Andrade. He was a member of the Mission San Jose council of the U. P. E. C.

Funeral services were held from the family home Friday, under the direction of the Chapel of Palma. Mass was said at the St. Joseph's church, at Mission San Jose, with the Rev. Father J. A. Leal officiating. Interment was in the St. Joseph's cemetery.

Mr. and Mrs. Milton Fournier and family, and Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Bennett were among the guests at a Mother's Day dinner, given for Mrs. M. A. Stribley by Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Bennett, at Oakland, Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Woods will return to Niles today from a trip to Deansburg, where they visited with relatives.

Following a precedent set by the class of 1922, the senior class at the Washington Union High school is planning to stage two plays instead of one, for the annual entertainment this month. This time, however, the plays will be given on separate evenings, rather than both on the same night. Fire Marshal Approves School Inspection Plan

Pending action by county authorities on a proposal to have fire inspection in all schools made uniform, Frank Madruga, Centerville assistant chief and president of the Alameda County Firemen's Association, is letting the matter rest. He stated this week that word has been received from J. W. Stevens, state fire marshal, to the effect that all duly deputized chiefs and firemen, may at any time make an inspection of any public building, but that he considered the proposal to get the sanction of local authorities, in legal form, was a good one.

MORE ON Alameda County Probe

political patronage was the principal reason for the three bodies doing the same kind of relief work, and he charged inefficient service and high overhead expense.

"Know-it-all lady bountiful" types of social service workers, assertedly employed in Alameda county, were scored by Wagner.

He said social service work is controlled by a certain group of organized medical men who have only their own interests in mind.

A disabled unemployed war veteran said that while his family was existing on $4.80 a week, a social worker told him a quart of milk was too much for two children, Wagner charged.

A family budget was cut $10 a month because a wife earned $4.25 in one month, he added. An aged woman had her budget reduced from $22 a month to $11 a month after she deeded her property to the county, because she made $3 or $4 a month mending silk stockings, he said.

A general awakening of the taxpayer, who foots the tax bills presented by politicians, is slowly coming about, according to statements made by M. B. Geary, executive of a large parcel delivery system operating in the bay region. The Oakland Post-Enquirer carried the following remarks made by Geary:

"Let no one labor under the delusion that someone else pays the taxes, Geary said. "The tax structure of America today is so complex and far-reaching that more than one-fifth of the earnings of the common citizen goes into the hands of politicians who dispense it with reckless abandon."

"Of the politician, Geary says: "Efforts of politicians seem to be directed, not toward lessening the burden on the paying public, but toward the quest for new ways to shake more from the nearly-empty pockets of the taxpayers."

"But they don't seem to realize that the apparently inexhaustible and meekly submissive taxpayers of America are reaching into empty pockets with a growing realization that all is not well. "When they rise in their might they are going to 'crack down' with an impact that will shake many a politician from his entrenchment."

"Then, and only then, will so-called 'public servants' realize that the golden goose is not so stupid when cornered."

ESTIMATES OF 'COT CROP INDICATE GOOD SEASON

Southern Alameda county should rank high among the apricot producing districts of the state this year, according to a preliminary survey published last week by the California Prune and Apricot Growers' Association. The report states that the 1935 crop will be similar to the crop produced in 1928 and 1929, which is some 80,000 tons less than the bumper crops of 1932 and 1933.

In analyzing the figures of the survey, the report shows that Santa Clara county will have less than 50 per cent of a normal crop, although it will be heavier than last year's. Alameda county is ranked among the sections with a fair crop. The Hollister section, including Armas and Watsonville, will produce from 15 to 20 per cent less than last year. The northern section, excluding Modesto, should run about the same as in 1934, the report pointed out, with the Modesto area producing about 20 per cent more than last season. The San Joaquin area reports a fair crop, according to the survey, with a good crop in the Tilton variety and about 50 per cent of normal in the Blenheim. About 10,000 tons more than last year should be harvested in the southern part of the state with Ontario, Hemet and Banning, in Los Angeles and Riverside counties reporting a good crop to offset losses by rot in the Ventura district.

In Washington township, heaviest producer in the south county, growers are becoming more optimistic as thinning progresses, and actual estimates may be made. Many orchards give promise of producing the tonnage of last year's crop many times over. The association survey said that no serious reports of offers in the field for 1935 crop apricots have been noted, with growers firm in the opinion that prices will average that paid for No. 1 quality last year.

SERA Headquarters To Be Opened at Hayward

Announcement of a plan to convert the Native Sons' hall, at Hayward, into an SERA southern Alameda county headquarters, was made last week by H. B. Green, assistant to the county SERA director. Negotiations for the building are to be completed soon, and occupancy will be started on about May 20. About fifty or sixty SERA officials and members of the clerical staffs will have office space in the building.

The new headquarters will serve the territory from Oakland's southern city limits to the eastern and southern boundaries of Alameda county, an area in which between 1,500 and 2,000 persons will be employed on SERA projects.

The new headquarters will make it unnecessary for workers to travel into Oakland, and make for more efficient handling of the local work.

Fifty members of the organization filed up the main aisle of St. Joseph's church, to specially reserved places near the sanctuary. Each member wore a pink carnation in honor of Mother's Day. The Rev. Father John A. Leal, pastor of St. Joseph's, celebrated the mass and delivered the sermon. The singing was rendered by the Rosarian choir.

Following the mass, the OYO group adjourned to the club room in the old mission, where breakfast was served. The following Rosarians acted as hostesses: Anna Mae Escobar, Margaret Burke, Irene Williams, Eileen Silva, Irma Azevedo, Dorothy Williams, Myrtle Corey and Phyllis Dias. Editorial Comment

NORMAN H. PARKS, Publisher Register

That is immaterial. There is a possibility that they are both innocent. If not innocent, they have at least served long terms, and suffered greatly. Their crime, if actually committed, was a political one. And that is always a mitigating factor. Man, often running afoul of constituted authorities throughout the countless centuries that he has been hacking away at the fetters that bound him, has been forgiven by succeeding regimes or later by posterity for violence committed in the sacred name of reform.

And, besides, are not cut-throat murderers being turned loose by the parole board almost every day? Turned loose before they have gotten acclimated to the drear walls of San Quentin and Folsom. Then why not send out into the sunshine of freedom these men—Mooney and Billings—who have been rotting for a life-time in confinement, mainly because they were members of a labor union, not because they were convicted of murder!

MOORE ON SKYROCKETING

prospects of any school district in order to advance something that has not yet shed its swaddling clothes of faddism.

The whole phase of the school health center move, as managed as a separate unit, may be classed as an unnecessary good. The move came at the peak of a period of prosperity with several other fads that are connected now with a school system. Like the noisy donkey that tried to imitate a lion, these fads at times parade in the field of politics while dressed in garbs supplied by the field of education.

In no sense of the word is the move necessary as an adjunct of education to be kept aloft from the school management. Rightfully, child-health supervision so far as the hours of school are concerned should rest with the teachers, practically all of whom are as well trained for that supervision as the rank and file of the so-called nurses employed. It is an insult to the intelligence of a class room teacher to place in her hands the training of the most delicate organism of the child—the brain—and then to tell that teacher by implication that she is not intelligent enough to look after the child's skin. I have had a more varied experience than any other teacher in Washington township, and I cannot recall one instance in that half of my experience outside Alameda county when it was necessary to close a school on account of an epidemic. I have already admitted, however, that social conditions have changed since then. In that wide experience I have met thousands of mothers, who, on an average, have been as intelligent and pains-taking with their children as the teachers and nurses.

Finally, what is to be the outcome of the proposal? If the health center needs extra funds, why take such an indirect way to procure them? The school districts that should give the extra aid would have to be replenished by a slight tax or go without. Already the school system is in a death struggle to maintain its support. Property taxation for school support has broken down in California; and the sales tax, although the fairest tax ever levied in California, is decidedly unpopular and will likely be emasculated by the state legislature before that body adjourns.

Mrs. Ebright, who now heads the health center in Centerville, draws a salary of $2,040 a year. In addition she is allowed traveling expenses to the amount of $420, a total of $2,460 a year. That is almost twice as much as many of the elementary teachers in the township are paid. Miss Bradley, the Pleasanton nurse, is supervising health conditions in four of the township districts this year and is being paid partially by Washington township presumably—I don't know. If the requested extra aid is to meet Miss Bradley's salary allowance, the salaries of the teachers will eventually pay that allowance—a tolerable example of "robbing Peter to pay Paul." If it be necessary to have two health supervisors in the township (I do not think it is), it should be no task to find two young people willing to take over Mrs. Ebright's work for her income—and why continue to train young people and not give them a chance to practice? The whole matter is up to the township trustees to settle. Let us hope that they keep the dog wagging his tail.

FIRST LEAGUE HALF IS CINCHED FOR NEWARK NINE

Forced to one of their best games of the season, the Newark Merchants retained their lead in the South County league Sunday, with a 6 to 4 win over Pleasanton. Robinson and Silva pitched a four hit game for Newark. Ornellas led the hitters with 3 for 4.

Niles forged up into a tie with Decoto for third place, with a thumping win over Vargas' charges on the Niles diamond. The final score was 18 to 8. Ferreira, Niles left fielder, did the impossible when he got five hits in five tries. Kelfer, Laybourne and Amaral did the best for Decoto. Three umpires were used, each retiring when the disputes waxed hot and heavy. Decoto filed formal protest to the victory, but later withdrew their complaint. They had protested because of the lack of an authorized league umpire in the balance of the game.

The Alvarado-Irvington contest proved to be a one-sided affair, with Alvarado gathering better than twenty runs to Irvington's zero. The Irvington nine, a game, fighting crew, are expected to come along stronger in the second half, now only one game away.
